China arrested ex-official for alleged spying for Taiwan

Saturday, February 23, 2008

The China Post news staff

TAIPEI, Taiwan -- A former official from China's communications ministry has been arrested by Chinese authorities over alleged espionage claims for Taiwan, a Taiwan newspaper reported yesterday.

Li Jian, a former deputy director of the ministry's Taiwan Affairs Office, was arrested on Lunar New Year's eve for allegedly collecting intelligence for Taiwan, the United Daily News cited "reliable sources" as disclosing.

While at the office, Li played a vital role in a cross-strait agreement in 1997 to introduce the scheme of an "offshore transport center" that would allow faster shipping between Taiwan and China, the paper said.

According to the paper, Li left the ministry to become a businessman. But Chinese authorities put him under surveillance in 2000 after becoming suspicious of his ties with Taiwan.

After seven years of monitoring, Chinese authorities arrested him earlier this month, but refused to disclose details concerning his charges, the paper said.

Li is the third Taiwan affairs official since 1991 that China has arrested on charges of espionage for the island, the paper said.

Spying

Spying is a method of observing a person's activities without his/her knowledge

In the computer arena, spying is a technique used to continuously monitor the computer or the network

- It is used by the crackers to know the work done by the user on a particular computer
- Spying does not corrupt or hack the data but uses the data according to the spy's interest

Hidden cameras, voice recorders, and spy cameras carried by employees can defeat organizational security

- Such spyware devices can be used for corporate espionage

Money

- The main intention of spying is the financial gain

Individual conflicts

- To take revenge due to some personal or organizational conflicts

Information

- To get the information which will be useful for the outsider in future

PNP setting up more 'spy cams'

By Thea Alberto
INQUIRER.net

Posted date: February 22, 2008

MANILA, Philippines -- Amid accusations it has been installing surveillance cameras to trace the movements of Rodolfo Noel Lozada Jr., key witness in the national broadband network (NBN) scandal, the Philippine National Police (PNP) said Friday more closed-circuit television (CCTVs) would be set up all over Metro Manila.

PNP Director General Avelino Razon Jr. said about 30 more CCTV cameras will be installed as part of the police's anti-criminality drive and mainly intended to monitor traffic, not administration critics.

Lozada himself first raised the alarm after one of the cameras was installed by what he described as hooded men in civilian clothes in front of De La Salle Greenhills in Mandaluyong City, where he and his family have sought shelter while he testifies in the Senate inquiry into the NBN deal.

Wednesday night, another camera was discovered outside St. Scholastica's College in Manila, where Lozada was guest at a forum on Thursday.

"[The] CCTV cameras are mainly for traffic monitoring and anti-crime monitoring only and will not be used to spy on anyone," aid Razon in a statement Friday.

At least 26 cameras have been installed since October last year, including the one at La Salle Greenhills in Mandaluyong, Senior Superintendent Nicanor Bartolome, PNP spokesman, said.

Bartolome also clarified that the device installed on a lamp post in front of St. Scholastica's "was not a PNP CCTV camera but rather a photo-sensor device that is used to automatically switch off lights during the daytime."

The use of CCTV cameras against crime was first tried during the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) the Summit in Cebu City in January 2007 and again during the ASEAN Ministerial Meeting in Manila in August 2006.

"Our people in Metro Manila need not be afraid of these CCTV cameras but rather feel safer that with them, our children are far more secure in our streets and other public places," said Bartolome.
